About the conference

Workers' rights are governed through two processes: primary legislation – that is, the law as agreed by parliament; and case law – that is, the decisions and rulings made by the court system. Case law is of vital importance to workers' rights because it clarifies how Acts of Parliament are likely to be interpreted and implemented by judges, while in the case of judicial review it can overturn the law altogether.

Whilst the political world has seen Government curtailments on trade union freedoms and the right to strike, several cases have reasserted the right to collective bargaining (including those involving Jivanji and INEOS), following the Kostal case. In addition, joint us as the speakers meticulously guide us through significant individual cases relating to disability, religion and belief protections, victimisation, whistleblowing, holiday pay and protection from detriment on trade union grounds.

Who should attend

Trade unionists, employment lawyers working in support of trade unions, and academics and students with an interest in industrial relations and labour law.

How to get there

Train: Lime Street Station for British Rail and Merseyrail.

CPD accreditation

All IER seminars and conferences attract credit hours under the Law Society's Continuing Development Scheme and the General Council of the Bar's New Practitioners' Programme and Established Practitioners' Programme. Delegates requiring CPD points may be charged an additional administration fee of £10 to cover our costs.

Additional information

Name changes are accepted up until the time of the event. Delegates who advise IER of their cancellation more than 15 working days in advance will receive a credit note with 10% deduction for administration.
